EAST DIVIDE IS ON LATERAL WORK

The East Divide is now crosscutting for the big ledge which is not supposed to be any great distance from the shaft and the face is looking very good. On the Alto two shifts are working sinking the shaft which has gone through some fine quartz and are now in fine breccia. The plant is now complete and last Monday air was turned in to the East Divide for the machine drills where the first application was in finishing the station at a depth of 410 feet. The station and crosscutting was started under good auspices and the management feels that the work will be advanced rapidly especially since drifters and small veins are showing up.

The Alto has one of the best equipments in the divide district and with the big compressor operating there will be no shortage of power for using the drills on both properties which are connected by means of an air line which has been extended to the bottom of the East Divide shaft.
